

Renovation, Weeks 6-8: Update and Wait

When I walk into the kitchen, I hear crickets. Ok, not real crickets, just the metaphorical ones. Which is good, considering that in Week Five we had issues with really undesirable creatures in the house. But I hear the crickets like the humor in movies when it's so quiet and nothing is moving that the moon is staring at you so brightly that you have to look away.

Freaking crickets.

The cabinets are in- but TOPLESS!

I should back up and cheer before I complain. In Week Six, the cabinets were installed. Can I get a “hell yeah” from the crowd?! (hell. yeah.) Thanks. Finally, real progress. They are beautiful and clean and I am amazed how easy it looks but how many excruciating, intricate details are necessary to make it all look just right. (LUCAS- IF YOU READ THIS, YOU ARE AMAZING.)

Cabinetry is like wizardry, but without the cool hat.

Shortly after the cabinets were hung by the sink with care (yes, St. Nicholas had recently been there), Carolina Custom Surfaces came to take the measurements for my countertops. They used some of the coolest technology and gadgets that I've ever seen— again, wizardry! Freaking laser beams to measure the space, the angles, the cuts. I don't mean to overestimate here, but I am anticipating sheer perfection from this process.

We expanded the small pantry space and added drawers and doors. I love the easy access now!

And then the crickets. Oh, the pain in waiting and waiting and waiting and waiting. And waiting. I know that the countertop template process has me believing in perfection, so I should wait patiently. This is not an unusual or even unanticipated wait time (especially considering these three weeks include the New Year holiday), but patience is not a virtue I possess.

What do I possess— a cell phone. And yes, I've called to check on the progress, my scheduled appointment time, called back to see if materials arrived, and reconfirmed the appointment time. (Thank you, calm, caring staff at Carolina Custom Surfaces, for handling my crazy. Because it's out in rare form right now and you are on the receiving end of the line.)

So I quiet the crickets by playing really loud music in the kitchen and share my cooking adventures with you instead. (Are you following me on Facebook and Instagram?) I've made two batches of Crock Pot French Onion Soup. I've shared my passion for Korean cooking by making kim bap rolls (very much like sushi but so much better!). We've had sandwiches and cereal and easy-peasy mac and cheesy and all those other go to foods that don't require any prep.

Three weeks of updates, all wrapped into one post. I hope you are enjoying my adventure and my crazy. Be sure to check back next week and see what the final week of install brings!
